In this simplified rubric, each of the eight major movements in an Expository Sermon is given a designated score. The points allocated to each criterion reflect their relative importance in the overall effectiveness of the sermon.

The "Public Reading of Scripture" section assesses the delivery and impact of the scripture reading, while the "Presenting Issue," "Exegetical Statement," and "Expository Statement" criteria evaluate the clarity, relevance, and accuracy of these key elements.

The "Interrogatory" and "Transition with Keyword" criteria focus on the speaker's ability to engage the audience through thought-provoking questions and smooth transitions between sermon movements.

The "Main Argument with Divisions" section carries the highest point value, as it encompasses the bulk of the sermon's content and requires strong scriptural discussion, effective illustrations, and practical application.

Finally, the "Closing Argument" criterion evaluates the speaker's ability to provide a powerful recapitulation, impactful illusions, and a compelling final charge.

The total possible score for the rubric is 100 points, with each criterion contributing to the overall evaluation of the sermon's effectiveness.
